

VICTIM OF HOLD-UP IN AUTO WON'T SAY WHO WAS WITH HIM

Dr. David L. Taylor Says
Companion Is Nervous and Publicity Would Injure Her

Two young men, wearing caps and carrying revolvers, stepped out of the bushes alongside Golt road, near Moshu avenue, in the vicinity of Van Cortlandt Park, about midnight and jumped on the running board of Dr. David L. Taylor's automobile. The machine was standing at the time in a secluded and dark spot. In it were the doctor and a woman, who, he says, was a patient and whose name he refuses to make known.

"Please throw up your hands," said one of the robbers, placing his weapon close to the doctor's head. The command was obeyed.

One of the robbers then searched Dr. Taylor. He found a few cents in cash only, and remarked, "A man like you ought to have more money than that on him." He put the small coins back in the pocket from which he had taken them and then approached the doctor's watch.

The other robber ordered the doctor to drop his hand so that a diamond ring might be removed from a finger. The doctor obeyed. Then the holdup men turned to the woman. They took a ring from her finger, but put it back when the doctor told them it was of small value.

"Now if you make any noise for the next ten minutes you'll get shot," said the robbers, who disappeared into the underbrush. The report of the robbery made by Dr. Taylor at the Kingsbridge police station and an account of it given by the doctor to a reporter to-day diverge at this point. The physician explains the discrepancies on the ground that he was greatly excited when he visited the station.

WHAT THE DOCTOR SAID TO THE POLICE.

This is the story, as given to the police:

The doctor said he was compelled to stop in the lonely spot where the robbery occurred because his engine was not working right. He got out to fix it, which took about ten minutes, and had just resumed his seat and was about to start the car when the robbers appeared. He made no mention of other cars standing in the vicinity.

Immediately after the robbery had, he said, his companion screamed and fell from the car. The Kingsbridge station, a mounted man, appeared in a moment. Other automobiles also drove up. A search was made for the robbers, but they had disappeared.

"The lady with me is a patient of mine," said the doctor, "she is convalescent. I left home for a ride in my car and thought of her and stopped by to get her."

He refused to tell who she was, even though the police called his attention to the fact that it was very unusual for the victim of a felony to conceal the name of an eye-witness to the crime.

This is the amended version as given by the doctor to-day:

"The lady with me is my patient, but she is also a member of my household—a guest in my home in the Alhambra, on West Twenty-first street," he said. "My wife and other relatives were playing cards last evening, but I was so warm I decided to go for a ride and asked my patient, who was also my guest, to accompany me. We left my home together. I have absolutely nothing to conceal, but won't tell her name, because she is nervous, and that condition would be aggravated by publicity."

STOPPED FOR A SMOKE, NOT TO FIX ENGINE.

"My engine was not out of gear. I stopped in the place to have a smoke. There were other machines standing near me when the robbers appeared, one a few yards in front and one a few yards behind. I thought at first the robbers were joking, then I saw they were in earnest and was badly frightened, I admit. In fact, I was too badly scared to take a good look at the robbers."

"My companion did see them well, however, and if suspects are caught she will look them over. Until then she is not to appear or be named in the case."

The doctor last night gave the value of his ring as $100 and of his watch as $50. To-day he said the ring was worth $500 and the watch $50.
